2. Title and thumbnail

Title (locked, vidIQ score 92)

Peng Dehuai's Top 3 Legendary Tactical Moves | The Man Who Drove America Out of North Korea

Alternatives (vidIQ scores):

- Peng Dehuai's Top 3 Legendary Tactical Moves | The Man Who Turned Korea Around (87)
- Peng Dehuai's Top 3 Legendary Tactical Moves | The Man Who Ambushed the US Army (86)

Why this thumbnail

Alternative for YouTube's Test & compare: NEVER SEEN (type 3: 300,000 men no aircraft spotted, the hook's opening).

Checked: the AI image has no text of its own; we added KUNU-RI - SUNCHON ROAD and US 2ND INFANTRY DIVISION. Snowy ridges, a truck column on a valley road and infantry on the ridges match the Gauntlet (no tanks or aircraft shown). The portrait is Peng's real 1955 marshal portrait (public domain on Wikimedia Commons), not an AI likeness; in 1950 he wore a plain uniform without rank.

Before uploading: check the thumbnail at small size on a phone.

3. Description (copy and paste)

The first line is the title. Everything after it is the description: ready to paste, with NO links (channel rule). Keep the credit lines: the music, sound, archive and image licences require them.

Peng Dehuai's Top 3 Legendary Tactical Moves | The Man Who Drove America Out of North Korea

By late November 1950, the war in Korea looked as good as won: one last American offensive was meant to end it on the Chongchon River. But three hundred thousand Chinese soldiers had marched into North Korea in secret, and within a month the US Eighth Army had been driven out of North Korea, in what the US Army itself calls the longest retreat in its history.

Peng Dehuai commanded the Chinese People's Volunteers in Korea. In this video we break down his three greatest tactical moves: the night ambush of the US 8th Cavalry Regiment at Unsan in November 1950, the trap on the Chongchon River and the Kunu-ri "Gauntlet" that shattered the Eighth Army's right flank in late November 1950, and the New Year's Eve offensive against the seams of the UN line that took Seoul in January 1951.

Own the night. Bait the trap. Hit the seams.

Which commander should we cover next? Let us know in the comments.

Upload checklist

- Play the 1080p master through once (sound, sync, no black frames).
- Upload the master.
- Paste title, description and tags; upload the thumbnail (1280x720).
- Fill in the business email in the description.
- Tick 'altered or synthetic content'.
- Add end screen and cards; set visibility and schedule.
- After 24-48 h: check click-through rate and 30-second retention; if CTR is under 2% after ~1,000 impressions, switch to the alternative thumbnail.

Facts to double-check before publishing (approximate, single-source or from memory; see research/FACT_NOTES*.md):
• 'Longest retreat in US military history' = the Eighth Army's own official wording (said as 'what the US Army itself calls').
• Unsan losses (Appleman: over 1,000 missing at first, ~600 after stragglers returned); Gauntlet ~6 miles (Appleman 1989 via Wikipedia).
• Seoul retaken 14 vs 15 March 1951 (said as 'in March'); Ch'osan reached 26 Oct (standard accounts).
• Long March 18,000 -> ~3,000; 'Old Chief Peng'; Lin Biao declining the command; Mao Anying on Peng's staff (Wikipedia).
• Third Phase: whether the Chinese deliberately aimed at the ROK divisions (Mossman: by design or coincidence; Chinese sources: planned).
• Peng's death 'denied proper medical care' (Domes / Shambaugh via Wikipedia).
• All front lines are approximate (logged per date in research/FACT_NOTES_*.md).
