Description (copy everything in the box)

By 1780, the American Revolution was being lost in the South. Then, on a cold January morning, a crippled frontier wagon driver wiped out Britain's most feared legion in less than an hour.

In this video we break down Daniel Morgan's three greatest tactical moves: the riflemen who shot down Burgoyne's officers at Saratoga, the trap at Cowpens that destroyed Banastre Tarleton's command, and the blueprint he left Nathanael Greene before Guilford Courthouse, the road that led Cornwallis to Yorktown.

Strike the officers. Bait the enemy with what he expects. Spring the trap.

Which commander should we cover next? Let us know in the comments.

Facts to double-check before publishing

• "499 lashes": Morgan's own telling (he said the drummer miscounted).
• Timothy Murphy's shot that killed Simon Fraser: tradition ("according to tradition" in the voice).
• Morgan showing his whip scars at the campfires the night before Cowpens: tradition.
• Burgoyne telling Morgan he commanded "the finest regiment in the world": "is said to" in the voice.
• Cowpens losses: British ~110 killed, 800+ captured (200+ of them wounded); Americans ~25 killed (Babits gives slightly different totals).
• Guilford Courthouse: Greene ~4,400 vs Cornwallis ~2,000; British ~530 casualties.
