2. Title and thumbnail

Title (locked, vidIQ score 91)

J. Lawton Collins's Top 3 Legendary Tactical Moves | The Man Who Broke Open Normandy

Alternatives (vidIQ scores):

- J. Lawton Collins's Top 3 Legendary Tactical Moves | The General Who Did What Patton Got Credit For (96; good A/B title)
- Lightning Joe Collins's Top 3 Legendary Tactical Moves | The Man Who Broke Hitler's Normandy Front (92)

Why this thumbnail

Alternative for YouTube's Test & compare: 4,000 TONS (type 3, ominous stakes: the carpet bombing of 25 July).

Checked: the AI image has no text of its own; we added SAINT-LO - PERIERS ROAD and PANZER LEHR. Hedgerow fields, the straight road and four-engine heavy bombers match Normandy, 25 July 1944. The portrait is Collins's real 1948 US Army photo (public domain), not an AI likeness; it shows him as a general after the war (he wore two stars in 1944).

Before uploading: check the thumbnail at small size on a phone.

3. Description (copy and paste)

The first line is the title. Everything after it is the description: ready to paste, with NO links (channel rule). Keep the credit lines: the music, sound, archive and image licences require them.

J. Lawton Collins's Top 3 Legendary Tactical Moves | The Man Who Broke Open Normandy

Fifteen hundred heavy bombers. More than three thousand tons of bombs on a strip of Normandy barely three and a half miles wide, and some of them fell on American soldiers. Within a week the German front in Normandy had been torn open, and the man who broke it was not Patton.

J. Lawton "Lightning Joe" Collins commanded the US VII Corps from Utah Beach to the Elbe. In this video we break down his three greatest tactical moves: cutting off and storming the fortress port of Cherbourg in June 1944, throwing his armour into the chaos of Operation Cobra to break out of Normandy in July 1944, and destroying the spearhead of the 2nd Panzer Division at Celles, just short of the Meuse, on Christmas Day 1944.

Cut them off, then never let them dig in. Throw the tanks into the chaos. Hit the spearhead when it runs dry.

Which commander should we cover next? Let us know in the comments.

Upload checklist

- Play the 1080p master through once (sound, sync, no black frames).
- Upload the master.
- Paste title, description and tags; upload the thumbnail (1280x720).
- Fill in the business email in the description.
- Tick 'altered or synthetic content'.
- Add end screen and cards; set visibility and schedule.
- After 24-48 h: check click-through rate and 30-second retention; if CTR is under 2% after ~1,000 impressions, switch to the alternative thumbnail.

Facts to double-check before publishing (approximate, single-source or from memory; see research/FACT_NOTES*.md):
• Collins as Army Chief of Staff 1949-53 (archive caption); the origin of the nickname Lightning Joe.
• Cobra target box ~6,000 x 2,200 yards (said and shown as about 3.5 miles wide).
• Celles losses: Cole's figures for the whole 2nd Armored operation 24-27 Dec (HistoryNet gives a wider range).
• 'Deepest point' of the German offensive (standard wording).
• Kelly and Ogden units; MacKelvie relieved ~13 June; Culin's hedgerow cutters (from memory, standard facts).
• Harmon's 'the bastards are in the bag' is attributed via HistoryNet and said as 'reportedly'.
• All front lines are approximate (logged per date in research/FACT_NOTES_*.md), esp. Cobra 27 July and the Bulge's south edge on 24 Dec.
